Description:
Providing the data of Job salary according to schools, location, school types, and also other information such as SAT scores to get into the school, school location as well as the administration rate.

2. Our tables are different from Phase I tables since we added other data such as SAT scores to expand our database usage. We also broke down the long redundant data tables in Phase I to have clearer representation of attributes as well as relationship between the data variables.

Here are the list of our DATABASES (just example not all real data):

Primary keys are in bold

Major:

MajorID	MajorName
0001	Architecture

MajorStartingToMidCareer:

Major ID	StartingMedianSalary	MidCareerMedianSalary	PercentChangeFromStartingToMidCareer

4. We downloaded the datasets from Kraggle as .csv files stored in /Data Acquisition and Input/Data Sets. Then we used <https://sqlizer.io/#/> to convert the .csv files to an sql file in order to insert their values into a database.

The resulting .sql files in /Data Acquisition and Input/ are:

degrees_that_pay_back.sql

salaries_by_region.sql

salaries_by_college_type.sql

scores.sql*

From these tables we constructed new tables for our database.

Those sql queries are located in /create tables.sql. This also includes the queries to convert $<xx,xxx> to a decimal value.

*We removed extraneous columns in scores.csv because it was too large to load into the database.

5. We used mysql

6. Our project is a simple website (URL shown on cover page). The website allows the user to input a college name or major ect. and receive information in a table format by clicking submit under the entry.

The first half allows user to type in input and do their own query out of their interest.

The second half are the common SQL questions users might ask, so we put them under as demonstration of information we can get from this database.

Questions in the first part include queries such as looking for how many majors have starting salary of the users' input.

Questions in the second part include queries such as the starting and mid-career median salaries of ivy league schools.

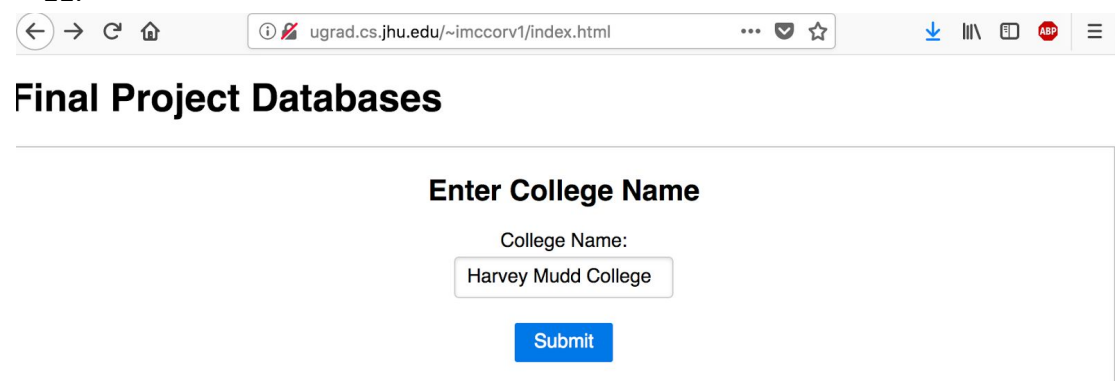

7. We focused on complex extraction of real data from online sources since a lot of data have null value and we have to make lots of changes to the table (break down, link, assigning ID and changing attribute types). We also did an interesting interface (web page) that clearly demonstrates sample queries this website can provide knowledge on.

8. Project Strength: We have massive data especially on the sat score and admission rate analysis and the database is really useful for pre-college student to help them decide where they want to go and what they want to study. The massive data has been combined with a smaller dataset of colleges. There are a variety of stored procedures that can give interesting results. The information itself is also incredibly useful to people interested in college research or people who would like to track the scalability of salaries of certain majors. The database has also been more normalized than the large datasets were originally.

9. We would like to expand the tables even more: finding more attributes and more relationships such as finding which universities have which majors and have more attributes such as separating median salary for female and male to further complete our analysis. Of course we would also want our web-page to have a more professional view with more functions (and more user friendly). We would also like to make the queries more optimized so that results can be received faster.

10. We received no help from the others, but we have used a website to help populate the tables into the database: <https://sqlizer.io/#/>
